The Forgotten Columbus of Our New Navy

We have received numerous letters and articles of commendation of our recent editorial under the above caption, which has been cordially endorsed by leading papers wherever John Roach and his work were known. One of the most gratifying expressions of approval has reached us from the pen of Lieutenant W. H. Jaques, late of the U. S. Navy, who was closely familiar with the construction of the Torpedo cruisers and is the ordnance expert who organized the famous steel armor and gun plant at Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, where he has charge of the scientific department of the ordnance work. A prominent gentleman of this city sent a copy of his Will, containing the editorial to Mr. Jaques who caused it to be copied in the Bethlehem Times, with the following introductory remarks over his own signature:

*The Editor, Fif. and Courier.*

All of you readers who recall with pleasure the visit not very long ago of the R. I. Times, Boutelle, & Co., chairman of the National Committee of the House of Representatives, during the late Administration will remember his tribute to the accomplishments of the Bethlehem Iron Company and his sturdy advocacy of our national defense. His oration delivered before the body of which he is a member:

With these tributes to him my memory is sure to call up pictures of your good and successful efforts in the cause of DAVIS, WADDELL, & CO., April 22. I can recall no political argument so personal or technical defense that so grandly, truthfully, and affectionately was made. Your services to our country should be appreciated by you as much as by me. The remembrance should be given to the world as an example to all who do their duty.

Yours truly,

W. H. JAMES,

South Bethlehem, May 2, '93.

Kicking the Old Soldiers

In the second term is contemplated by the old soldiers that even the most bitter champion of the President will not have the assurance to question the record. The purpose of the Admiration to him and the veterans of the late war is very clearly set forth in the following despatch from Webb, the reliable correspondent of the Boston Journal:

There can be no question that it is the duty of the nation to make a full tribute upon the old soldiers in order that it may make an appropriate offering of economical administration and that the President, as far as he dares, will adopt the motto of Congress, "Duty to the Dead." Boston, who recognized the virtues of the G. and Army as human culture coolers and tank followers.

Col. O'Farrell is yet to enter upon the task of making a full tribute to the aged in closing his legal business in Boston. But in the meantime the Administration has not been idle in the lessons learned. The result is appointed as the new Commissioner of the Commission of Veterans' Pensions, who has for some years been active as a claim agent in this city. The business of his firm as pension claim agents has been nominal, at least, transferred to personal and a special attorney, a record regarding claims pending in their name, which is on file in the City Hall.

Moreover a general order has been issued in the office of the Pension Office, which has been forwarded to the various countries as much needed reforms are false pretenses. They are designed to insure rather than to benefit the pensioners. They indicate as easily as could an embezzlement of the public funds of the Democrats to deprive the old soldier of his just legal rights, and to render null and void the act of the Republican Congress which gave them in effect a disability pension.

No other ruling ever made in the Pension Office is more fraught with importance to the old soldiers than that of last week, which has not been made public. It provides for the payment of the Clerk of the office is about $20,000. Under the act of June 2, 1890 passed while the Republicans were in control of both Houses a disability pension was given to all disabled men through the line of duty. Under that act a number of pensions have been granted and at the present time are ready for the issuance of the certificates of probably more than 200,000.

In all of those cases the testimony has been examined, the law investigated and the proper medical examinations made, the whole routine which under the fugitive soldiers is complicated is it done in a manner that insures that all that is required to be done when Gen. Grant went out of office was to issue the certificates and make happy the veterans who had the greatest of the nation which had the right that they were entitled to this compensation.

New work has been undone. Order goes as a rule to any further procedure, and a man who has been injured in service will not get a dollar until this new ruling has been completed with the existing law requires that all cases shall be properly supported by testimony. In the cases of the 200,000 referred to, it is said that there has been no evidence of the kind required. It is understood by direction from the White House, which requires the testimony of two witnesses, instead of one, as under the old rules, that the reason was not the result of the vicious habits of the applicant. This rule is enforced even in the case of men who have a hospital record which shows exactly what their condition was when the pension was granted, as they should be large draft upon the Treasury would be necessary to meet the cost of the examination.

The effect of this is that the 200,000 cases will have to take their chances with the law as it now stands, filed, and that these 200,000 old soldiers will be compelled to do their work over again. The poor fellow who has seen laboring for two years to get his testimony in shape must begin again. It will be seen that the old soldiers is in a position to suffer if the Democrats may make a fictitious claim of economy. If these pensions were granted now, as they should be large draft upon the Treasury would be necessary to meet the cost of the examination.

But if there are not enough to cover their completion then the money will not be used and will remain in the Treasury, and the post-payment of these pensions will add to the growing economic tendencies of the Administration. Of course the soldier cannot be kept out of his disability pension permanently, but he can be made to wait until his claim has passed through the interminable routine once more. The final report of the investigating report will have been made and its details have been submitted to the country and many of the 200,000 will be dead.

This provision is a miserable makeshift. The veterans are entitled to know that there may be an apparent foundation for a claim of extravagance in previous administrative in the Pension Office. The Administration, having appointed a gallant Union General as Commissioner of Pensions, evidently expects that the people will be satisfied and will not look beyond this figurehead. A better view of the real policy of the Administration respecting the claims of the Pension Office can be gathered from the inspection of the lists of appointments and removals. For reasons which the old veterans will understand these changes are kept from the public as much as possible. Those here are the preliminary changes.

The former chief of the Eastern division was Mr. Wilcox, a Union soldier from Crawfordsville, Ind. He has been a young man 30 years of age from the Copperhead district of Indiana, and put in his place. This man was not out of favor, and it is known that the sentiment of the old soldier, nor the feeling of gratitude that moved the whole country when these men were fighting for the preservation of the Union, but the Union soldiers were also set aside, and two ex-confederates put in their places. These are instances that indicate the policy that prevails, as it shows what progress will be made when it comes to issuing pensions for ex-Union veterans.

Major Clayton was elected in Ward Seven Monday practically without opposition, as the Democrats made no contest. The talk about taking the matter to the courts will probably cease now that it has failed to deter the Republicans from demanding a legal election in the ward.

The restaurant keepers on the World's Fair grounds are destined to do well to grief. They wanted to get rich too fast and so charged exorbitant prices for food, but the Chicago people have taken hold of the matter in a way that will make it decidedly warm for these greedy individuals unless they call a halt. The Advertiser says:

The World's Fair officials should make short work of the restaurant extortions. The peace and prosperity of such an exposition should not be hampered by men anxious to make a quick fortune. The public will hold the authorities responsible and they cannot move too quickly or vigorously on the ranks of these gentlemen with franchises.
